Starck relies once again on master perfumer Dominique Ropion, to help him express his vision of Love. A collaboration that gives birth to Peau d'Amour, the scent of a deep emotion that cannot be described nor understood, the scent of a torrid romance. An addictive, powdery and floral perfume, explosive and deliciously intoxicating, that sweeps everything away.

It is the perfume of a woman that claims her femininity and her sexuality. A mental and mysterious woman, elegant and self-confident, whose aura and fragrance hang in the air, enveloping and heady, to be remembered.

This perfume is the recognition of feminine nature at its best, in all its complexity.

"It was the day when everything stopped. Then time began again, to the rhythm of a heartbeat, the sun approached, the air became music, thoughts came together. The world in harmony. Around You, around Us. It was the day that I recognized you, it was the day that I disappeared into your skin. It was the day when only love remained. For You."
